INTERNATIONAL PRESS

International press serves as an emblematic representation of our shared desire for openness and the equal right to share as well as receive information. A free and open media space supports the development of an independent civil society. The existence of barriers amongst nations to sharing information indicates the job and duty of the media to present accurate and purposeful reporting on issues, which ultimately impacts the way we live together in peace. Press does not simply inform citizens so that they can have an active role in democracy; it also provides a mechanism for the transfer of social and political views between the citizenry and their elected officials in order to promote solutions to issues related to politics and society.

The power of the media is bi-directional, providing background narratives and creating emotional and intellectual responses that can effectively sway public sentiment. Global media today examine and understand transnational problems using the greatest possible breadth of analysis, thus allowing the complexities of a situation to be articulated in a way that transcends any one country's unique experiences or challenges to that problem.

- Role of International Press: Represents the shared desire for openness and equal right to information, supporting independent civil society.
- Media's Duty: Present accurate and purposeful reporting on issues, impacting global peace and understanding.
- Power of Media: Influences public sentiment by providing narratives and analysis that transcend individual countries' perspectives.
